FRANK CAYOU IN TROUBLE

Is Charged with Doping Foot Ball
Players at St. Louis University

ALLEGED SOMETHING WRONG

The charge is being circulated that Frank Cayou, formerly coach at Wabash has been guilty of "doping" his football players. We don't know what kind of "dope" he used but we do know that while at the local high school he did his best to get something to get out the very best there was in a man and their opponents in this part of the country charged him with cramming them with football knowledge, which he seems to be doing with the players of the St. Louis school, hence the bawl.

The charge was made in the following special sent out from Lawrence, Kansas:

"That Coach Cayou of the Washington University football team, has been guilty of 'doping' his men for the sake of putting ginger into their work, is the substance of the charge that is to be formally laid before Doctor F. H. Ewerhardt, physical director of the St. Louis institution.

"It was charged that the Washington, lads received alcoholic stimulants last year by the direction of the coach, but this year the men on Cayou's team were 'doped' with hypodermic injections before they went into the game, according to the Kansas men.

"The matter was brought to the attention of the athletic authorities of the university, and they have decided that, in the interest of good sport, if nothing else, something should be done to bring the matter to the attention of the Washington University authorities."—Crawfordsville Journal.

It will be remembered that something the same charges were whispered round while Cayou was at Wabash, and that the "Big Chief" shown not only in football lore but in profanity and other things while with the Little Giants.

Ben Hur meet tomorrow night at 7:30 o'clock. There will be initiation and after the work a social hour. All members should be present.

TRIBUTE TO PARKER WISE

The Following is From the Metuchen Recorder.

The death of Mr. John Parker Wise came as a great shock and sorrow to his numerous friends, both here and in the West.

He was ill less than a week, having been taken sick on Sunday with a sore throat which did not yield to treatment. An abscess formed in the epiglottis which lancing could not relieve and an examination revealed a condition of acute Bright's disease. The end came very suddenly on Friday evening, the 22nd.

Mr. Wise came to Metuchen about five years ago and has been living at Elmwood Farm, managing the estate of Mr. George Herron, of Florence, Italy. Through his power of attorney Mr. Wise had made many purchases of land, enlarging the Herron estate; also erecting many buildings, and in every way improving the place, until it has become known as one of the most attractive country homes in New Jersey.

Mr. Wise expected to enter upon his professional career as a lawyer before long. And with this in view he had been with Judge Voorhes in New Brunswick for a time. Later, during the past year, he was connected with the firm of Lindabury, De Pew and Faulks, of Newark, in addition to his management of Elmwood Farm.

Mr. Wise was prominent in both religious and social affairs. He was an active member of the Presbyterian Church and of the Brotherhood of the church, which he addressed upon Christian Socialism. Mr. Wise was deeply interested in the cause of the laboring man and the problems of humanity.

He was a member of the Metuchen Club and of the New Brunswick Golf Club and his home was one of the social centers of the community. He has made many friends who greatly mourn his loss.

He was a very unusual man, combining the finest qualities of mind, heart and character. With his brilliant mind and keenest delight in intellectual pursuits he was constantly acquiring knowledge. He was vitally interested in all the problems of life. With high spirits and a fine sense of humor, he was a real and continuous inspiration. His loss will be keenly felt by all who knew him. But his life will ever remain a beautiful memory of noble manhood.

M. D. Ricketts is confined to the house by sickness today.

MASONS HAVE HOME COMING

More Than Two Hundred Sit Down to Banquet in the Masonic Halls

MANY VISITORS PRESENT

Last night was a big night for the members of the Greencastle lodge of Masons. It was Home Coming night, and many members of the local lodge who are seldom able to attend were present as well as a number of visitors from over the county. Letters were received from members now out of the city and state. One of the most interesting of these epistles was from Bishop Bowman, who is a member of the local lodge. He wrote of his love for Masonry and the lodge here and regretted that his physical condition made it impossible to be present.

After a business meeting work in the third degree was given. At the finish of this work the members and visitors to the number of one hundred and fifteen adjourned to the lodge dining rooms for a banquet. The dining room was not large enough for the occasion and tables were also spread in the Odd Fellows Hall adjoining. Members of the order who were present unite in declaring it one of the most enjoyable evenings spent in the lodge rooms.

GOLDEN WEDDING.

On Saturday evening, November 13th at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Jno T. Couchman in Roachdale, was celebrated the 50th wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Jno. A. Turner.

The home was beautifully decorated for the occasion. In the east parlor Mr. and Mrs. Turner standing in front of a bank of ferns, and under a canopy of yellow and white chrysanthemums received congratulations from 75 friends and relatives. The dining room was beautiful in its profusion of yellow chrysanthemums and the table containing the bride's cake and adorned with 50 yellow candles. Seated in the dining room with Mr. and Mrs. Turner were Mrs. Julia Stultz and Mr. W. F. Goslen, the only two of the wedding guests of 1859 who are now living. Refreshments were served in two courses, tiny wedding bells, gilded with old gold ribbon being used as favors.

Miss Mary Grider presided at the punch bowl. Ruth Bridges of DePauw school of music furnished music during the evening and G. E. Turner of Indianapolis sang a number of appropriate selections. Mr. and Mrs. Couchman were assisted in receiving and entertaining by Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Bridges, Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Turner, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Brothers and Mr. and Mrs. G. E. Turner.

Mr. and Mrs. Turner received many handsome and valuable presents. They are well known in and about Roachdale, having been prominent in church and social circles for many years. AN UNSOLVED MYSTERY

Whereabouts of Prominent Men Unknown and Suspicious are Aroused.

A FEW FACTS KNOWN

A number of suggestive and suspicious happenings around the court house this morning followed by the disappearance from the city of certain well known men, has caused no end of surmise. The facts are worthy of note. First Sheriff Stroube purchased a hunting license, then locked the sheriff's office and disappeared. Following this Judge Rawley of the Circuit Court and Court Stenographer Carroll left the court room remarking that it would be a fine day to go hunting. They have not been seen upon our streets since. S. A. Hays and C. T. Peck left the court house discussing the weather, dogs, guns, the possibilities of birds and rabbits and they can not be found in the city. The clerk of the circuit court was seen driving out of town with a dog, a gun and a broad smile. He has not returned.

It is gravely suspected that these men have been led astray by reports that quail and rabbit are numerous in the county, and that they have taken to the tall timber and the blackberries in search of the aforesaid birds and beasts. If the suspicions of those who have watched their actions should prove correct we will give the size of game bag tomorrow. It is reported, however, that Mr. Peck was seen later reading the Outing Magazine and the Recreation's description of a quail hunt, and seemed to be taking his exercise by proxy.

Atkins, Wm. Shepherd, Thomas Lisby, John Welsh, George Wood and H. J. Banker; for stewards, Mrs. Mary Atkins, Mrs. Clara Carwley, and Mrs. Anna Schackel. ENTERTAIN AT DINNER

Col. and Mrs. J. W. Weaver Host and Hostess at a Delightful Social Event Last Night.

Col. and Mrs. J. R. Weaver were host and hostess last night at a most delightful dinner given in their spacious home at "Beecherhof". Covers were laid for seventeen in the great dining room, and a delicious dinner in six courses was served.

After dinner Col. Weaver rose and introduced as speakers impromptu those who had recently visited strange places or been participants in unusual events. Mrs. Mansfield gave a short talk upon her experiences in Japan, mentioning especially the DePauw men met there. Dr. Seaman spoke briefly and in happy vein of the new arrival at the Seaman home. Dr. Gobin spoke of the recent inaugural at Wesleyan which he attended, and Dr. McConnell convulsed his hearers with a laughable description of his experiences on his recent trip to Vassar College. The dinner, from the standpoint of the guests was a great success and the event one long to be remembered.

Those present were President and Mrs. McConnell, Mr. and Mrs. Van Arsdale, Mr. and Mrs. R. L. O'Hair, Dr. and Mrs. Seaman, Mayor-elect and Mrs. Miller, Mr. and Mrs. F. C. Tilden, Dr. Blanchard, Mrs. Mansfield and Miss Matern.

BACK HANDED ARGUMENT.

We are in receipt of a marked copy of the Evening News of Hartford City containing an article to prove that prohibition in Oklahoma does not prohibit. The article states that much booze is shipped into the state each week and drunkenness is common. This is used as an argument against the state laws and in behalf of the saloon. It appears a rather black-handed argument. Suppose it true that a saloon conducted under law would produce no worse results than now exist and put some revenue in the treasury, this is only part of the argument. The fact that booze is shipped into territory contrary to law argues that those who conduct the booze business are very careless of law and could not be depended upon to obey any law. Again, if a majority of the people of Oklahoma are against the sale and use of liquor in the state it appears that the solution of the problem is not a law to let saloons in but a law to keep booze out—that is a law to prevent the shipment from wet to dry territory and the power of confiscation for all booze discovered. If after a trial of a dry law that makes things dry the people want a change, well and good, let the saloon return. But it is foolish to argue that the saloon must be put back because the saloon keeper has succeeded in defeating the purpose of the present law. The remedy, as long as Oklahoma wants to be dry, is simply more law. It will be time to ask for saloons when the state is dry and the people weary of dryness want it wet.

Lawn Fete

Perils

"Where to tonight?" asked Archie, cheerily, as he came up from the dining room in the boarding house and discovered Willie, his roommate, wrestling with a high collar and other indications of a butterfly career near at hand.

Willie gave another desperate tug at the refractory end of the collar, hooked it over the button and drew a long breath of relief before he answered.

"I thought I'd drop around to that little lawn party over on the boulevard," said Willie. "I believe they rather expect me from the warmth of the invitation I got. I told you about that, didn't I?"

His smile of gratification faded a bit as he turned and encountered Archie's stern look of disapproval.

"There you go!" said that worldly young man. "After all the trouble I've taken trying to lead you into proper paths! The moment my head is turned you're gallivanting off to ice cream socials on lawns! I thought I had you framed up on the lawn fete proposition so you didn't dare walk on the grass. And here you are, actually putting your head into the lion's mouth and taking chances that may wreck your whole career."

"Oh, it isn't as bad as that, I hope," said Willie, carefully examining an imaginary spot on the front of his white vest. "I suppose a fellow can mingle with human beings once in a while without hurting anything."

"Back up," said Archie, warningly. "That's the line of talk they all begin on and it lands every one of 'em sooner or later. 'Mingling with human beings' and 'LIVING the life of a hermit' and all that sort of stuff! They jolly themselves along in the belief that they can back out when they find they are getting in over their depth, but you'll find there's no lifesaving boat ready to dash to the rescue when you begin giving your signals of distress."

"Not on your life. It's a case of sink or swim when you get into the social whirl, my boy. I'm trying to reach you before you go down for the third time."

Willie smiled in a superior sort of way and gave his scarf an approving little pat as he surveyed it in the mirror.

"I'm afraid you're a bit cynical," he suggested.

"Cynical!" echoed Archie. "Not a bit of it. Only I've been standing on the sidelines watching the game so long that I hate to see a good fellow go wrong. Why I knew a young chap about your age a few years ago, and after he once got started he didn't last four months. He began with this ice-cream social thing, too. It looked innocent—the way a man learns to play poker after he has monkeyed with whist and cinch for a few years. He went along from the lawn fete to the Saturday night hop and then he got reckless and before his friends could butt in and drag him back to safety he was up against afternoon teas and junior proms and low neck receptions and the whole blooming show—he didn't make any limit at all. Then, while a few of us were doing what we could to sort of brace him up and make a man out of him again, he slipped and fell and it was all off. He was lost forever."

"What happened to him?" inquired Willie, with unusual interest.

"Married!" blurted Archie, with horror depicted in every bachelorette lineament. "Think of it—married! And with his whole life before him!"

"Oh, there isn't danger of anything like that in my case," protested Willie, taking a surreptitious flash at himself in the mirror to be certain that he was looking his best.

"Isn't there, though?" said Archie, warmly. "That's the trouble with you young fellows—you're always too cock sure of yourselves until it's everlastingly too late."

"Say, you remind me of the boy who thinks because he's never been held up that he is in no danger and the very night he blows about it at the club or somewhere he has a 45 bounced off his skull on his way home. You're taking chances all the time, you know, and when you deliberately go to one of these lawn fete things it's like hanging a sign on yourself that says, 'Come on. I'm easy.'"

"When you go to this affair tonight for instance, provided you are reckless enough to take a chance after I've tipped you on all this stuff, you're taking your life in your hands. The minute you get inside the gate they drop a flag on you. Some kindly old lady will hook on to you before you have gone five feet inside the grounds and will see that you do not make a getaway until after the last race is run and that you have a little bet down on every event on the lengthy program they have provided."

Taking a firm grasp on your bridle, she will back you into a box stall, where you will find a charming young woman in a white dress. They always wear white dresses at these lawn affairs because they look so much younger in white—sort of a reminder of commencement day. This young woman will have an inordinate disproportionate and positively fierce capacity for ice cream; she will also have upward-looking eyes—the kind that are so soulful when you are standing over her and gazing into their blue and dreamy depths."

"Oh, I don't expect any such luck as that," said Willie, carefully brushing his best hat and preparing to escape. "Still, it wouldn't be such a fearful fate, I believe."

"Just as I feared," said Archie mournfully. "You are going willingly to your doom. I can see it from here. After you have filled up this yawning void in female form with ice cream and cake and lemonade and other dyspeptic truck, you will learn that she has taken a deep interest in you."

"You see, she'll discover in the first 10 minutes that you live in a boarding house and she will fairly ooze sympathy for your hapless, forlorn condition. You won't have time to tell her all about it this evening, but you'll promise to call at your first opportunity. Then, inside of two weeks, she'll have you hooked, strung and hung over the side of the boat. You don't believe this now, of course," concluded Archie, "because you have not met her. But when you stub your toe, remember I warned you."

"Well, I really don't believe things will turn out this evening exactly as you have predicted," said Willie, with a wise smile. "You're a little bit off this time."

"Why do you think so?" asked Archie, languidly filling his pipe.

"If you must know," replied Willie, "the young woman for whom I intend buying a moderate amount of ice cream already knows about my hapless bachelor condition and we won't waste time discussing it tonight things to talk about."—Chicago News.

There was a rap on his lordship's door.

"My lord," announced the servant with a low bow, "the airship awaits without."

"Without what, James?" queried his lordship as he lit another cigarette.

"Without wings, without gasoline, without ropes and without a propeller. We have just been in a collision."

And with an impatient wave of his hand his lordship ordered the airship taken around to the airsmith without delay.

Meeting the Condition.

"Augusta," said Mr. Wyss when the quarrel was at its height, "you have devised a great variety of ways to call me a fool."

"Merely a matter of necessity," replied Mrs. Wyss. "You have devised so many ways of being one."

"A little learning is a dangerous thing; Drink deep, or taste not the Pierian spring."

Thus quoted Burphy, doyen of the repeater corps. The great main room of the New York Western Union office had stilled down as much as it ever does; the last of the beef ciphers were played; the cable loop had sent out "30" to Newspaper Row, and all of the local and city wires were silent. In the corner near the south windows the Associated Press repeaters banked and rattled away still, with a sound like the drumming of hail on a tin roof, for down in Washington an ecclesiastical drumhead court-martial was holding an all-night session upon a higher critic who had dared to hint that the teachings of the Shorter Catechism were as foolishness compared with those of Darwin. I had been listening to the rhythmic swing of the coded Morse fleeing westward, while I watched the veteran nurse sit, admiring; the skill with which he corrected the many variations in current caused by a violent thunder storm then sweeping over the Jersey meadows. Knowing that his remark would serve as a text for a story, I waited, while his hand went from helix screw to armature spring and from armature spring to local adjustment. The heads of the great corporation value that hand sufficiently to move them to keep its owner upon what is virtually a pension, that they may be able to lay claim to its service to coax a president's message out of the Jersey fog, or the beef ciphers from the clutches of the aurora.

"I have no manner of use for the Presbyterian Shorter Catechism," he began in his pleasant brogue, the niceties of which mere ink and paper can never reproduce, "but I will say that when it is nailed into folks when they are young it sticks. Prentiss might have known this, being of an old Presbyterian family, but then he never did care to know anything, except how to have his own way."

"He was depot laborer and freight handler for the Northwestern Pennsylvania road when I went to Freeboro as operator and station agent just after the big iron discoveries there in the late seventies—a big, hulking sort of a fellow with the soul of him all shriveled up with the hell fire of evolution that fellow Darwin."

jerking his thumb over his shoulder in the general direction of Europe, "stirred up. He had a turn for reading and investigating odd things and attended a lecture on the 'Ascent of Man' or something like that about a week after the Presbyterians of Freeboro turned him down when he wanted the place of deacon. Being in a rage against his church at the time and, moreover, having a mind incapable of holding more than one good big idea at a time, he gave himself over entirely to the Adversary of Souls, may he never rest in peace. His change of heart killed his wife, who left him a daughter, Kitty, who was about 12 years old when the mother died. Before the mother went she succeeded in setting the girl's faith on a firm foundation, and the father never made it loosen a peg with all his blasphemies, nor, to tell the truth, did he try very hard, for he loved the girl as much as he hated the church. He could yank boxes and barrels about with one hand, but that hand was always light and tender when it patted Kitty on the head when she brought his dinner to him at noontime. She had been keeping house for the old codger about seven years when I came to Freeboro, and was a fine girl—a fine girl she was. But no matter, a bald-headed old sinner like me mustn't be thinking of the likes of her—she married a better man long ago."

"Well, as I was saying, Kitty was a fine girl, and it didn't take Jack Malcolm long to find it out after he came down from Pittsburgh to take charge of the books at the iron mines. Jack was a bright fellow, who had picked up a bit of telegraphy, but found bookkeeping a better way of making a living."

"Prentiss and Jack were great friends at first, and the boy might have made his way into matrimony pretty easily, if he had not become mixed up in the big Presbyterian revival that swept over western Pennsylvania that year. But after he joined the church, Prentiss turned sour on him and then the young couple's love making began to go hard. But young folks have ways of their own, and one day when Kitty brought her father's dinner, Malcolm came in to the depot with her and told the old fellow that he loved the girl and that they wanted to be married. I was in the office at the time and the three of them had the part of the depot used as a freight room all to themselves. Just what words were passed no one ever knew, but at last Jack came out, his face as white as chalk, but alone. About half an hour later Kitty came out, also, with her head in the air, walking as stiff as a major, for she had lots of her father's spunk in her. Lastly, out came Prentiss, trundling a barrel of cement on his truck, and never a word did he say, only nursed his wrath and spite close into his withered heart."

"The next day was Saturday, and a close, sultry day it was—such as only the Blue Ridge country can produce in midsummer. There was a shower early, just enough rain falling to make the air more heavy and muggy still. After the shower passed the great, black masses of clouds piled up all around the edges of the hills that wall Freeboro in, and these were lit up every few moments by flashes of lightning, each electrical discharge out on the sky line being followed by a crackling on the switchboard in the stuffy little depot office, which seemed at times fairly ablaze with the blue flames. We had no safety devices to care for the lightning in those days, and a severe thunder storm nearly always damaged either the instruments or switchboard."

"During the morning a load of beams intended for the mines were shunted off upon the switch, which left the main line a little west of the depot. The single track to the mines crossed a creek on a trestle about half way over the meadows, and one of the beams jostled off the lead while on the bridge, snapping the telegraph line as it fell, the wire being strung along the trestle on arms which extended outward from the ties. One of the trainmen, noticing the accident, told Malcolm of it, and as Saturday was a half holiday for those in the office, he got excused a bit early and started to repair the break, turning up at the station about 11:30. He saw me in the office and hailed me from the platform through the open window, asking me to disconnect the mine wire, as he was afraid to work on it while the lightning was coming in over the main line so sharply. After doing so, I lent him the office repair kit and a piece of wire to splice the break with, and he started off up the switch toward the trestle."

"After Jack left the depot, having hunted up my dinner basket and, nothing to do for the moment, I taking a seat in the main room near the benches, ate my midday repast. After this, feeling rather comfortable and easy, as one always does after an agreeable meal, I tilted my chair back against the wall and read a bit from a paper that I found lying on one of the benches. I could hear Prentiss going about his work as usual as he made ready for the coming of the 1 o'clock milk train. After the clang of the cans ceased I heard him wheel his truck against the front of the station. Then he opened the door and came in softly. I could see him plain enough but it was not the same Prentiss somehow, or at least the face was not the same—it looked like a devil's. He came over to where I was, looked me over narrowly and then, turning quietly about, went toward the office door, which stood open. Through this he passed and closed it after him. Prentiss went right up to the switchboard and, taking down from behind it a diagram of the wires I had made for Jack, he first took every plug out of the board and then slowly and deliberately placed them in the line of holes directly opposite the binding post that held the mine wire, thus placing the entire main line in connection with it and converting it into a veritable magnet, which would attract every bolt of lightning that hit the line for miles on either side of us."

"My vision seemed to reach its climax as, after a last look at the diagram, he picked up the very plug I had taken from the board to disconnect the mine wire, and viciously jabbed it into its proper position, thus making the connection doubly sure. The floor of the depot seemed to open and he fell through and I slid after him, and we began to fall, fall, fall, as though over a precipice. We struck with a crash, I on top. I started toward the door, but paused as I heard a smothered groan from inside. Hastily stepping forward, I threw open the door and was horrified to find Prentiss stretched on the floor, holding his hands to his eyes. Bending over, I asked him what the trouble was, but received no reply, as he was unconscious. The doctor brought him around all right, but he never saw again—there was a burn on the ball of his left thumb and a white fused streak across the bridge of his nose. He said afterward that he went into the office to see me and that he was near the switchboard when a big flash came in."

"Well," I asked, "did Malcolm marry the girl?"

"He did that," he replied decisively, "and I was best man and kissed the bride. And they lived happily ever thereafter and boarded the old blind villain to the day of his death, free of charge."

"Don't you consider that a hard name to call him, considering his misfortune?"

"Well, I don't know. You see, I found the plugs on the switchboard just as I saw them in my dream or whatever it was, and Prentiss had the one that we used to connect the mine wire clenched in his hand when I reached him."

"Did you tell any one about your dream?"

"Not I. I knew the minute I saw him that he was past doing further harm, and that he would have to depend either upon the young people or charity for a living after that; so I held my peace."—George Gilbert.

NEW MAIL SERVICE PROPOSITION

In Lippincott's Colonel Willard French tells of a new plan which seems likely to be adopted by the Post Office Department and which should prove of great benefit to the public. It is at present known only as "the return envelope and postal card" plan, but it has already gone through all of the preliminary examinations of the Congressional Committees on Post Offices and Post Roads, and commissions appointed by the Postmaster General, and has not only been approved but by legal authority has been pronounced something which the Department has power to inaugurate without legislation. Colonel French says:

"The system is something which applies chiefly to advertisers who use the mails in distributing circulars with enclosed envelopes or postal cards, soliciting correspondence or orders. A careful investigation has resulted in the report that where the enclosures are unstamped very little is ever heard from them, and where the cards or envelopes are stamped, but one in ten ever returns. This results in making each reply which the advertiser receives cost him twenty cents for postage alone. And yet, under the discouraging conditions, there are sent out annually, a hundred million envelopes and as many postal cards."

"The law requires that all postage shall be prepaid, so that any plan which has been devised will require the co-operation of outside agency, to the extent of securing a deposit of a hundred thousand dollars with the Department, as a postage fund. The Department will manufacture envelopes and cards, bearing a peculiar stamp which can easily be recognized distinguishing it from ordinary mail. These the Department will sell to whatever form of syndicate may represent the deposit, at the regular price less the price of the stamp. The contractor will distribute them as they may be ordered by advertisers, after having a return address printed on them, with notice that the stamp is void if the address is changed. Such envelopes and cards endorsed by advertisers may be returned to them without affixing additional stamp, but on arriving at their destination they will be held by the post office till the advertiser pays the regular postage on all such matter as he actually receives. The moment the envelope or card is mailed, the stamp which the Department impresses becomes a legal stamp and satisfies the law, while it is of no value if the address is changed, and no loss to the advertiser if thrown away. When the advertiser pays the amount of regular postage on all such mail as he actually receives, he only keeps the original deposit intact."

"It is not unusual for the Department to rely on outside co-operation. Pneumatic tubes, for example—and in fact almost all transportation—are accomplished through private co-operation, and it is not anticipated that there will be any delay or difficulty in arranging with some form of corporation, as a reasonable profit will be allowed by Government contract to the receiver and dispenser; while it will be greatly to the advantage of the Department to have an active agency constantly at work encouraging trade and creating new business all over the country. As a result of the investigations it was reported to the commission that without any further impetus than the removal of the present handicap to business in this line, the firms already using the mails would increase their use at least five fold, which alone would result in increasing the revenue of the Department over sixteen million dollars annually. With the natural growth and the new business that would follow it is thoroughly conservative to accept the report that when the system is understood and in working order the net revenue to the Post Office Department will come very close to wiping out even the threatened deficit of thirty millions. Considering either the public or the Department, it is worth trying."

Nail Biting.

Biting the nails is a nervous habit which should be overcome by strength of will in a grown person and by constant reminder with a child. If he is still too young to realize the importance of conquering such a fault. It is not only ruinous to the shape of the fingers and the nails themselves, but is extremely bad for the teeth, and the throat, too, which is very apt to be inflamed by small particles of fingernails. If a child's nails are anointed with quinine either in powdered or liquid form it will not take long to stop biting them. Extract of quassia is extremely bitter and will be even more efficacious. I saw a very beautiful and charming woman once, whose hands had been so utterly ruined by the long habit of biting her nails that she was obliged to wear gloves most of the time.

A World of Beauty.

Oh, what a world of beauty
A loving heart might plan,
If man but did his duty,
And helped his brother man.
The angel guests would brighten
The threshold with their wings,
And love divine enlighten
The old forgotten springs.
Oh, what a world of beauty
A loving heart might plan,
If man but did his duty,
And loved his brother man.

CARE OF THE FARM SEPARATOR

Lessens Wear on the Machine and Work For the Farmer.

The operator should aim to secure two things if he expects his machine to do good work: (1) A perfectly true motion of the bowl, and (2) a sufficient speed (which must be uniform) to create force for separating.

In order to have the perfect motion of the bowl, the machine must be set level and be kept clean and well oiled. The oil should be thin, or light, so that it will not gum the wearing parts. A heavy oil will make the machine run hard and will gum quickly on small, high speed bearings. All the bearings of the machine should be frequently flushed with coal-oil. It is well to make a run about once in two or three weeks, using coal-oil on all the bearings. This keeps the parts free from gum and washes out grit or sand that may have blown into them. It is an excellent plan to have a cover of close woven cloth or oil-cloth, that can be kept over the machine while it is not in operation. This will keep out dust and sand and will add materially to the lasting powers of the machine. The separator should be set up on a good solid floor so that it will not move about as the operator turns the crank.

Uniform centrifugal force is obtained by turning the crank at a given speed at all times and giving the crank an equal pressure at all points in its circuit around its axis. All machines have marked upon them, or given in the instruction book, the number of revolutions the crank should make per minute. Follow these instructions, counting the number of revolutions each time the machine is operated and frequently during operation, to be sure the speed is maintained. This is a point in which much careless work is done. Too many guess at the speed, and they seldom guess right. It is a good rule never to guess at anything when it is possible to know. The writer has found variation all the way from 25 to 75 revolutions per minute in the operation of machines by guess. At neither of these extremes would the operator believe that he was wrong, until he had been made to count the number of revolutions by the watch.

The life of a separator depends mainly upon the factors just pointed out. A machine that is allowed to run when gummy or dirty may wear out in a year. If kept free from dirt and well oiled, it will last a number of years. One of the objections urged against the separator has been that it would not be properly handled and that one or two years' service would wear the machine out. After visiting several hundred farms and inspecting as many machines, the writer has concluded that the farmers, as a whole, are taking much better care of their separators, mechanically, than was anticipated. Machines have been noted that had seen several years' service and were still practically as good as new. In a few instances, careless operators had nearly worn a machine out in less than twelve months. The farmer never bought a machine before in the use of which he was so frequently and urgently reminded that he must take care of it.

Speed has already been discussed, but it should be noted here that the greater the speed the greater the centrifugal force, and thus the greater the efficiency in separation. The speed at which a machine should be run is indicated by the manufacturer. Never run less than this; it is not practicable to run more.—Prof. E. H. Webster in Farmers' Voice.

Time of Feeding Lambs.

We believe it is better to feed lambs three times a day, although the common practice is to feed only twice. Those who have practiced feeding three times a day claim as an advantage for this method that larger quantities of grain may be consumed with less danger of injury than by giving but two. Good healthy sheep require from three to 3½ bushels of corn for each 100 head daily. In addition to this they should be given all the hay they will eat, provided they do not make glutons of themselves and become potbellied. Lambs do not require so much corn as aged sheep but should not be stinted in the alfalfa diet. One hundred head of lambs would naturally require from two to three bushels of corn daily. Aged ewes should be given food in quantity just between that required for lambs and sturdy wethers. One thing must be done in preparing feed for aged ewes and that is corn and other hard feeds should be ground. Never give them hard feed as their teeth are usually so bad they cannot masticate the kernels properly and as a result their feed does not digest and produce fat as it would otherwise do. Beet pulp makes excellent feed for ewes that have lost their teeth but without grain they will not make much gain on it in cold weather.—Field and Farm.

Curious Condensations.

If we except the American descendants of Jerome's first marriage in the United States there are now only three men who bear the name of Bonaparte.

That a man is never too old to learn is illustrated by the case of H. G. Whitaker of Pilot Mountain, N. C., a law student at Wake Forest College. Mr. Whitaker is 60. In the same class he has a son, P. H. Whitaker, aged 18.

TRANSCONTINENTAL COMMERCE

It is said that the traffic on the Tehuantepec national railway, which runs from the Gulf of Mexico to the Pacific ocean, across the isthmus of Tehuantepec, has recently increased so enormously that it has become necessary to double the capacity of the piers at the termini, the port of Salina Cruz, on the Pacific, and the Coatzacoalcas, on the Gulf.

It is scarcely three years since this railway was opened for business. Yet even thus early, despite the ample preparations as thought then for taking care of all traffic that would offer, it is liberally choked with freight.

More than $20,000,000, it is stated, will be expended in additional improvements.

This increase in the business of this Mexican railway gives a slight indication of the immense growth of commercial affairs upon both coasts of North America, as well as the tremendous increase in through shipments by way of this route to and from the Hawaiian Islands, Oceania and the eastern provinces of Asia? We say indication, for the reason that notwithstanding this heavy growth of traffic on this one line, it is but a small fraction of the total increases made when the tonnage of the transcontinental railways of the United States and of the Dominion of Canada, which are also busy with this same line of shipments to and from the east and west coasts, the Pacific Isles and oriental Asia is considered.

And the totals upon all these railways of today will be infinitesimal as compared with what they will be in 5 or 10 years from now, even allowing in the meantime for the opening to commerce of the Panama canal.

The building up of the west coast of America from northern Alaska to Patagonia is being accomplished with remarkable rapidity.

The Dominion is creating a nation within itself west of Lake Superior, a nation not only self-supporting, but with granaries, pastures and fisheries that will in time develop to such an extent as would feed Great Britain, as well as our own west coast, and is breaking its very high records for gain in population, development of natural resources and establishment of industries.

We began this article with Mexican gains in commercial transportation, but the Tehuantepec railway, with its great traffic, will not compare with that which will be handled by Harriman's Southern Pacific extension, once that is completed down the west coast of Mexico. Not a railway in the world traverses a region richer in all natural resources, both agricultural and mineral, than does this enterprise of Harriman's. It stretches along the Pacific slope of Mexico for hundreds of miles, and every mile will produce annually hundreds of tons of freight for the road, once it is fairly opened. It has east of it the great plateau of the Mexican republic, with a breadth of tributary territory of fully 150 miles for the entire length of the railway from the United States line to its southern terminus.

The Dominion, the United States and Mexico have all a most brilliant future through not only home development, but their advantageous position for commerce, both of Europe and Asia.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

The Story of Esaw Wood.

Esaw Wood sawed wood.
Esaw Wood would saw wood!
All the wood Esaw Wood saw Esaw Wood would saw. In other words, all the wood Esaw saw to saw Esaw ought to saw.

Oh, the wood Wood would saw! And oh, the wood-saw with which Wood would saw wood.

But one day Wood's wood-saw would saw no wood, and thus the wood Wood sawed was the wood Wood would saw if Wood's wood-saw would saw wood.

Now, Wood would saw wood with a wood-saw that would saw wood, so Esaw sought a saw that would saw wood.

One day Esaw saw a saw saw wood as no other wood-saw saw would saw wood.

In fact, of all the wood-saws Wood ever saw saw wood Wood never saw a wood-saw that would saw wood as the wood-saw Wood saw saw wood would saw Wood, and I never saw a wood-saw that would saw as the wood-saw Wood saw would saw until I saw Esaw Wood saw wood with the wood-saw Wood saw saw wood.

Now, Wood saws wood with the wood-saw Wood saw saw wood.

Oh, the wood the wood-saw Wood saw would saw!

Oh, the wood Wood's wood-saw would shed when Wood would saw wood with the wood-saw Wood saw saw wood!

Finally, no man may ever know how much wood the wood-saw Wood would saw, if the wood-saw Wood would saw all the wood the wood-saw Wood saw would saw.—Woman's Home Companion.

Some claim that skim milk and corn make a balanced ration. Whether this is so or not—one thing is true: If hens are given skim milk they get more protein than they can get from corn alone.

We believe skim milk fed to laying hens when eggs are twenty-five cents per dozen will pay a better dividend than if fed to pigs when live hogs are four cents per pound. What do our readers think or know about it?

COWS AND WATER THEY DRINK.

Young Cows Require Large Quantities of Water When Dry Fed.

Ordinarily the small cow drinks from 6 to 8 gallons of water in 24 hours, and the large cow drinks from 7 to 9 gallons. There is no fixed measure, as no two cows, even of the same breed, or of the same weight, or on the same rations of the same feed, and yielding practically the same quantity of milk of the same quality, will drink exactly the same quantity of water.

I have one small cow that seems to be satisfied with 5 gallons of water a day, while another one of her weight takes 7 gallons. A neighbor has a large Holstein-Friesian cow that drinks over 10 gallons a day, and another quite as large that takes only 8½ gallons.

My experience is that the younger cows require more water, and that there is a decrease each year in the water taken as the cows grow older. In some cases even this does not hold good. A cow out of sorts will drink more or less as she is chilly or feverish.

Indigestion, pasturage, changes in ration, irregularity in feeding and milking, and the amount of exercise are factors that influence the drinking of the milk cow. The character of the food has much influence. Dry food calls for more water. Succulent food carries its own water largely. The cow on pasture needs less and drinks less water than the cow on dry feed.

In providing a supply of water for a herd, it is well to furnish the water and let the cows measure their drinks for themselves. Then they will get the proper amount at the proper time. Running water and individual drinking vessels in the stalls will solve the problem of water and drinking perfectly.—J. L. Van Doren, in Ex.

Feeding Dish Water to Pigs.

It is a common practice to save the dish water as slop for pigs but as this often contains washing soda hogs fed on such slop are always out of whack and often sick and die. The symptoms and course of the disease appear much like cholera. Diarrhoea, vomiting, fever, lameness, partial paralysis, nervous disturbance and death frequently occur. The course of the disease from a few hours to several days, apparently depending upon the amount of alkali ingested at one time. Death occurs in the majority of cases. Upon post mortem examination, the lymphatic glands along the bowels are found swollen and dark colored. The mucous membrane lining the intestines is pale and shiny. Other internal organs are also involved. The treatment is wholly preventive and consists in avoiding the feeding of slops containing these alkalies.—Field and Farm.

Successful Vinegar Making.

The New York Agricultural Experiment station at Geneva was asked to ascertain the causes of poor quality, and to outline the methods of securing good vinegar. It is found that, properly done, there should be no difficulty in making vinegar containing the required 4.5 per cent of acid from York State apples; and by careful control of conditions the time of making may be considerably shortened. If the cider is not properly made and handled, however, the vinegar may easily fall below the standard, through failure to reach the required acidity, or through deterioration after the acid has been formed. Only sound, ripe apples should be used, avoiding dirty fruit or washing it before pressing. Use only juice from the best pressing, place in clean barrels which have been treated with hot water or steam to destroy undesirable germs. The barrels should not be full, nor tightly corked, as free access of air is desirable. In ordinary cellar temperatures the first stage, the alcoholic fermentation, should be complete in five or six months; but by storing in warmer rooms, and by the use of yeast the time can be much shortened. The second stage, the acetic fermentation, may be hastened by heat and by use of a good "starter" or "mother" or sharp vinegar. When the required acidity is reached the barrel should be filled to the bung and corked tightly to avoid undesirable fermentations.

Local Irritation.

Itching, which induces a horse to rub the legs together, stamp on the stable floor and otherwise exhibit signs of impatience, should lead to a careful search for possible causes of local irritation. Animal or vegetable parasites may locate themselves on the skin of the extremities and remain under the close covering of hair without being detected. Get rid of the irritation by the free use of soap and hot water, followed by a two per cent solution of carbolic acid.

Some claim that skim milk and corn make a balanced ration. Whether this is so or not—one thing is true: If hens are given skim milk they get more protein than they can get from corn alone.

We believe skim milk fed to laying hens when eggs are twenty-five cents per dozen will pay a better dividend than if fed to pigs when live hogs are four cents per pound. What do our readers think or know about it?

GREAT MEXICAN CHURCH.

Larger than Westminster, larger even than St. Paul's, is the Church of Santo Domingo. This great edifice, renowned in many countries, is known not only for its size but for the beauty and magnificence of its decorations and the many historic events entwined in its history. The church was built on consecrated ground, having been the site of the martyrdom of two Dominican priests.

It was early in the epoch of Spanish occupancy when Cortez sent Velasquez de Leon from Mexico city to Coatzacoalcas with a band of men to protect that port. In those days the road lay through Oaxaca. Of Oaxaca itself little was known other than the news taken back by the few expeditions that had been sent to the south by the conqueror. Velasquez de Leon brought some settlers for Oaxaca among them being several Dominican friars. After the soldiers had proceeded on their way to the port the Indians rose against the small band of settlers and on the spot where the church was afterward erected two of the fathers were cruelly put to death.

By 1550 there were a number of Dominican friars in Oaxaca and the question of erecting a church and convent for the use of the order was agitated. The exact date of the beginning of the work is not known, but it must have been shortly after the middle of the sixteenth century they began the work with a few laborers, who gave their services, and every member of the order worked hard collecting more funds. A petition was sent to the King of Spain for assistance, to which he responded generously. From time to time the King sent other contributions and there was no halt in the work.

St. Paul's cathedral in London measures 510 by 250 feet, and cost £747,954 or 7,497,540 pesos, or some 5,000,000 pesos less than Santo Domingo. Some idea of the size of the structure can be obtained when it is considered that four buildings the size of Westminster Abbey could be set on the ground covered by this Dominican temple. At the present time, however, only a small part of the church is used for worship, the other portions having been converted into barracks by the Government.

Owing to the great height and thickness of the walls of the church it has been used for a fort on any and every occasion when necessary. No wars, however, marred the serenity of the early Dominicans, and each year saw the church increasing in wealth. The library was ranked among the greatest in the republic. The interior of the church was decorated in many places with pure gold. The first drug store in the city of Oaxaca was opened by the Dominicans in the temple.

When the struggle with the French began it was not long until Oaxaca was in the hands of a French army. Santo Domingo was turned into a barracks and the gold decorations, the fine paintings and costly adornments were ruthlessly stripped from her walls. The friars were driven out and for six years the church was a fort and nothing more. The accumulated grandeur of 300 years was undone in a few brief months. The greater part of the structure is still used by the Federal garrison.

About ten years ago Archbishop Gillow received permission from President Diaz to restore a portion of the church. Thousands of dollars were spent on the interior of the main chapel, which is ranked as the most handsome of the republic. The decorations on the ceilings were executed at great cost. Surrounding the front of the edifice is an immense court, nicely paved and enclosed with a high iron fence. On each post is a bronze angel.—Mexican Herald.

Allienism.

"You are an alienist?"
"Yes, sir."
"That is to say, you know a crazy man when you see him?"
"That's about it."
"Is the prisoner sane?"
"He is."

"What particular thing determines your decision?"

"The size and source of the fee, of course. You must be a novice."

"No extraneous comment, please. Do alienists ever lie under oath."

"Those of the other side, yes, always."

"But supposing you had been retained by the other side?"

"In that case this side would have become the other side."

"And you say this prisoner is sane?"
"No, insane; crazy as a hare, an imbecile from the cradle."

"Haven't you changed your mind in the last few minutes?"

"Entirely so. For an instant I had forgotten that I was retained for the prisoner and not the state."

Soon after, the case went to the jury.—Public Ledger.

The governor of Mississippi did not dodge the issue raised by the fact that the silver punch bowl presented by the state to the battleship is adorned by a portrait of Jefferson Davis. His justification of the picture was simple: "If you condemn him, you must condemn us." Nor did the naval officer who responded to the governor evade the point. Everybody within gunshot was listening intently to the officer's words when he said: "We shall not deny the memory of your departed chief, and the homage that is due him, for we believe that there should be rendered unto Davis a tribute that is due Davis."

DEPAUW NEWS.

MUCH ENTHUSIASM RISING

APPROACHING EARLHAM GAME TOPIC OF DISCUSSION AMONG STUDENTS.

BIG PARADE BEFORE THE GAME

Efforts will be made to root as never before.

Great things are brewing in the breasts of the student body. With the approach of the hard Earlham game the mercury of enthusiasm is slowly rising, and from the way the things look now there will be some sort of a demonstration made before the game Saturday. Though every heart at DePauw beats true Gold for the team, yet it has always been a noticeable feature of our enthusiasm that we are too stoical about it. What makes the team feel that the student body really appreciates their work, is when this kind of support gets out and helps to push the thing along. It is this kind of support that our own team needs right now. Coach Brown and Captain Lawrence have given old DePauw the best team this season that they have seen for years. They deserve our support and a demonstration of our good spirit. What though they have played under a cloud of ill fortune? Is not that all the greater reason why we should show our appreciation of what they have done? Every school has its mollycoddles—every co-ed school has those big manly fellows who would rather go out to a football game with a "date" than to go over in the bleachers with their fellow students and help cheer their hard working team on to victory. Lets forget about the dates for just one day at least, and have every fellow in school at the mass meeting Saturday at one thirty, and then lets have every fellow in the "pee-rade" before the game. And not only this, but think of the noise four hundred male voices could make if they were together through the whole game, and every time a yell is called, lets have everyone in on it. No matter how good the team is, or how hard they are working this week, they will need your help to win from Earlham. The Quakers are coming down for blood, and will exert every atom of energy that is theirs, to win from their old rival DePauw. Now fellows, lets all pull at the same end of the rope this time, and help the thing buzz. Every one out in the pee-rade, and every one there when the rooting starts, and there to yell, too. A possible victory by Earlham is too much of a disgrace to take any chances on. The teams needs us all.

"A LOOK IN THE GLASS"—TALK BY RALPH HUDSON.

Delegates to Kokomo Convention Meet and Discuss Matters

"A Look in the Glass", was the subject of Ralph T. Hudson's talk at the Y. M. C. A. meeting last night at 6:30,—a talk which took the shape of a review of the daily life of a student in DePauw university. Mr. Hudson drew an excellent analogy between such a life and that of Ernest in the story of "The Great Stone Face." "We must think daily, he said, "On the Problems that are ever before us, and we must be unceasingly searching for faults and defects in our lives, and unceasingly striving to remedy those faults."

After this meeting the cabinet held a short session, and the delegates to the State Convention in Kokomo this week met to receive a few instructions and to consider best means of getting the most good out of their experience and of bringing back the most good to the local association.

Technical Program Will Be Especially Valuable.

It includes an address by Dr. Andrew Stephenson on "The Relations of History to Law," a paper by Harvey D. Hartsock on "The Comparison of the Payne-Aldrich Bill to the Dingley Tariff Bill," and a paper by Wendell Sherk on "President Taft's Winona Speech."

A number of men showing unusual hilarity were noted on the square last night, and has led to the suspicion that the corners of the lid were being tipped a little. The officers have their eyes upon the situation, however, and something is likely to drop soon, if the "funny" business does not stop, so the officials state.
